The customer is always right. Right? Even the most professional among us have probably encountered at least one customer who felt he or she was right to the point of a potentially hostile situation. And sometimes even other team members may become unexpectedly angry and/or violent.

Workplace violence is any act or threat of physical violence, harassment, intimidation, or other threatening disruptive behavior that occurs at the work site. It ranges from threats and verbal abuse to physical assaults and even homicide. It can affect and involve employees, clients, customers and visitors. Homicide is currently the fourth-leading cause of fatal occupational injuries in the United States. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics Census of Fatal Occupational Injuries (CFOI), of the 4,679 fatal workplace injuries that occurred in the United States in 2014, 403 were workplace homicides.

In spite of our best efforts to provide courteous and responsive service to customers, and regardless of how helpful and kind we may be to those around us, we cannot always predict how other people will act or react. It doesn't matter whether you perform audits, design software, sell used cars, schedule appointments, coach football, or manufacture medical devices, we all run the risk of facing a hostile encounter.

Join us on January 10 and learn how to prepare to handle a hostile situation. We will discuss how to:

- Defuse an irrational person
- Calm an angry person
- Let your attitude reverse a situation
- Identify the stages of patterned behavior
- Stay calm composed and objective
- Communicate clearly
- Be mentally prepared

About the Speaker: Michael Blatman, CPP, is a Crime Prevention Specialist with the Kennewick Police Department, a position he has held for 38 years. He is also the Law Enforcement Coordinator for Tri-Cities Crime Stoppers. Tri-Cities Crime Stoppers encourages members of the community to assist local law enforcement agencies in the fight against crime by overcoming the two key elements that inhibit community involvement: fear and apathy.
